ABOUT THE COMMISSION: The Commission conducts its work and studies in the following areas: China's military buildup, proliferation practices, regional economic and security impacts, energy activities, activities in U.S. capital markets, and World Trade Organization compliance; U.S.-China bilateral programs; economic transfers between China and the United States; and the implication of restrictions on speech and access to information in China. Its mission is to make recommendations to Congress concerning matters of concern in these areas.

DESCRIPTION: The Commission is seeking graduate-level research fellows to assist the analytical staff with research, analysis, and editing. Research fellows support in-house research at the Commission and the preparation of substantive materials to brief Commissioners in advance of Commission public hearings. Fellows may be asked to conduct original research in support of the Commission's objectives, and will play a key role in the collection and analysis of materials for the Commission's hearings and reports.

Candidates should be currently pursuing graduate studies in international relations, political science, law, business, or other fields related to U.S.-China relations, and should be in good standing with their academic institutions. Candidates must be U.S. citizens or permanent residents (holding a valid Green Card) with legal authorization to live and work in the United States. Candidates should have academic or work experience in fields related to China or East Asia, and should demonstrate a keen interest in developing expertise on economic or security issues addressed by the Commission. Candidates should possess strong research and writing skills, proficiency in word and data processing, and the ability to work on independent projects or as a member of a team. Mandarin Chinese language skills are strongly preferred but not required.

Research fellows will be expected to work full-time during the summer, or part-time during an academic semester. Fellows not receiving academic credit for their work may qualify for a stipend.

HOW TO APPLY: Please visit www.uscc.gov and complete the application form for Research Intern and submit to Katherine Koleski at kkoleski@uscc.gov.
